

Devold's Nansen roll-neck with Sympatex Windliner: The sweater's granddaddy was made by Devold and used by Fridtjof Nansen to cross Greenland on skis range from Power Stretch Lite pieces ($50-$90) to Polartec 200 Stretch pieces ($64-$140). DEMETRE offers 14 knitwear sweater styles ($80-$120) and is adding women's polyester tricot-lined Berber Pile and fleece jackets and vests ($79-$130).

From TSUNAMI, look for a line of fleece and pile pieces that designer Sheri Russell calls "more well-rounded." Styles are more varied, and colors range from brights to more subdued hues.

CAPELLO's sweaters ($60-$70) are predominately acrylic and blends. For junior Italian designer Olmes Carretti has updated DEVOLD's traditional Norwegian collection with colors described as "soft brights" and a new, proprietary yarn that gives a softer, brushed look to six basic designs. Each is offered in several styles from crewnecks to cardigans ($150-$195). Some sweaters ($225) are made with Sympatex Windliner. Devold's solid-colored, three-gauge wool sweaters ($150-$195) from the Outdoor group are being embraced by snowboarders according to the company.